i also found that the firmware update for my new lkv373a v3.0 devices do not work with the lkv373a v3.0 device manager. if you have a v3.0 device, follow the instructions below to update the firmware of your receiver: after the device manager opens, click on the plus sign button (+) in the bottom left-hand corner to view all of the devices on your computer. scroll down until you see the name of the device you want to install a driver for, and then click the device name. this will launch the appropriate driver for the device. follow the instructions on the screen. if you select to install the driver, the installer will then launch and begin to scan the device. you will have the opportunity to review any warnings or errors that may occur during the scan. when the scan is complete, the driver will be installed. if there were no errors or warnings, your device should now be working properly. change the setting in your capture device or video capture software to record video in.mp4 format. then change the setting in your video capture software to start recording. the.mp4 file will have an.mov file extension.mov file is usually used for preview. if you have a mac, save the.mov file to your desktop. if you are using imovie, you can download the windows app or try to capture the video on the mac and then

import to your computer with imovie. when you have captured the video, you can import to your pc by copying the file from your mac to your pc, or use itunes or another video player to play the video file.

i should also mention that i was able to get the tx to work on the windows system, but it was a last minute deal and i got it to work with the sd card. i would not be able to get it to work with the tx connected to the computer. another thing is that i have tried multiple rx's on the same pc, and they all seem to have the same issue, that the image stabilizes after a few seconds. at the same time, the tx is also showing the image just fine. i have also tried different sd cards and cables and they all seem to have the same issue. if the video signal from your tv or computer screen is connected directly to your computer, then your computer is able to watch that video signal as a device. if you are running windows vista or windows 7, this might be easy to do: to use the windows media center extenders, connect the video cable from your tv or monitor to the optical port on your computer. then, open windows media center. if the tv or monitor is connected to your computer's audio out jack, this will be the default source. if you have a digital cable box, you will need to select that as the source. to watch your video as a windows media center extender, you must make sure that your tv or monitor is connected to the computer's audio out jack. if you are using a digital cable box, connect the audio-out cable from the cable box to the audio-out jack on your computer. then, select the "video source" option in the main menu. if your tv or monitor is connected to the computer's video-out jack, this will be the default source. there is a known issue with the new lkv373a v3.0 devices where the video quality is much lower than before. please contact techresolve for advice on how to fix this issue. if you are using an older firmware than the v3.0 firmware (i believe it's v2.0-2.3.x), it would be advisable to update the firmware. 5ec8ef588b
