When you create a Microsoft.com account, you must create an email address for use with it. Email messages sent from a Microsoft.com account include the original from address as well as a return address. We will store the original from address in a sender field in the Microsoft Service Notification (MSN) (formerly MSN Hotmail) email you are using to send an email to us. This field is invisible to others. When you see the original from address in your message, you can easily reply to the message or opt not to reply to it. You can also choose to accept the original sender address as the returned address. Learn more about Microsoft accounts and your email address. Microsoft Office made a number of changes to how we have recognized end-to-end encryption as an option for data protection from other changes to the Way We Protect Microsoft Office 2016 Content, Data, and Documents made by a company called F-Secure. We have also made some clarifications of our position about encryption. You can choose to manage your data in places where you need it, such as in calendar, contacts, and notes. You can also choose to control when your data is uploaded to the cloud and to other Microsoft services. Microsoft is committed to delivering strong and comprehensive consumer privacy protections for users of its services, products and solutions. This commitment has been formally articulated in various documents provided for regulatory, legal, market, and/or business reasons and notably includes:
